Conjugal Affection.

Hon. Horace Mann, in his culogy upon Mr. Rantoul. related the following touching instance of conjugal affection, in connection with the last illness of the deceased :-"Yet Mr. Rantoul. even amid the agonies of his disease, had lacid intervals. There were convictions in his mind so deep scated, and affections in his heart so strong, as to stand unmoved by any tempest of delirium. On being telegraphed respecting the illness of her husband, his devoted and excellent lady, then in Massachusetts, hastened to his succor. She arrived here at 6 o'clock on the morning of the day he died. Instantly her voice wooed back consciousness and reason. He seized her hand in his, and held it till he breathed his last .-Even when his mind wandered, this grasp of affection was unclenched. Death only relaxed it. The swelling of the disease had closed his eyes, and it was beyond the power of muscular contraction to open them. He desired to have them opened by mechanical means, that he might once more behold the features and the face. whence, for more than twenty years, the light of love had shone down into his heart. Never, during the memory of living man, has there existed between the two countries such amicable relations as have prevailed during the last six months.

When, in December last, Louis Napoleon swept away republican institutions in France, and erected on their ruins a grinding despotism, the invasion of England was a project, the probability of which was discussed on both sides of the Atlantic, and the occasion gave rise, on the part of our American cousins, to offers of aid and assistance in the event of a project so infamous being attempted. The Americans regarded England as the home of European freedom, and the contemplated desecration of our soil by a foreign foe gave hardly less offence to the Republicans on the Western Continent than it did to our countrymen at home. A burst of indignation was evoked on all sides of the most cheering and patriotic kind, and matters remained in this happy gland as follows: state until a few weeks ago, when our new Colonial

The facts of the case, as far as could be ascertained, are as follows: Clark going to the house on Tuesday, for the purpose of seeing one of its inmates, found the woman lying upon a sofa, and went up to her and took hold of one of her feet :she jumped up and kicked him in the abdomen; he immediately fell to the floor, and soon became senseless: Doctors J. R. Lenening, and H. Gordon were called in. and after about three hours, succeeded in restoring animation; he then stated that the woman kicked him; inflammation set in, and Clark died on Tuesday night.
